Roblox is a game creation platform that allows players to create their own games using Roblox Studio's proprietary engine. Games are coded in an object-oriented programming system that uses the Lua programming language to control the gaming environment [4]. Users can create game products that are purchasable content through one-time purchases as well as microtransactions through developer products. The developers on the site exchange Robux, earned on various products in their games, for real currency through the Developer Exchange [5] and Premium Exchange. A percentage of the revenue from purchases is split between the developer and Roblox [6] [7]. As of November 1, 2020, Roblox Studio is no longer supported on Mac OS X 10.10.
