The Noordegraaf Files has Akila, who looks sort of like a cute swamp creature with spiky blue hair and breasts. However, calling her anything alluding to the fact that she looks like a fish-person is bound to get her very angry. She also grows tentacles on occasion. Sirens (the bird kind) and other monsters are also featured — humans are also in the comic's universe, but haven't appeared.

Bird's modus operandi has remained remarkably consistent: Identify cities without laws proscribing e-scooters, launch a fleet of them, watch as people start scooting all over town, and then wait as city officials scramble to respond to the newfangled transport option. The price paid, as of November 2021, has been nearly half a million dollars in fines and court fees, hundreds of seized scooters, numerous cease-and-desist letters from angry government officials, and at least three lawsuits. One is a proposed class-action suit launched by nine plaintiffs who claim that Bird, Lime, and Chinese scooter manufacturers are responsible for shattered teeth and broken bones. In another filing, the city of Milwaukee branded Bird a public nuisance. And there have been two reported deaths associated with e-scooters, according to The Washington Post.
