The Cree shared visibility from any alliance means you'll be giving away your discoveries the moment you ally them, but it works in reverse as well. That means you'll get to know where all their cities are - and what might be the best angles to attack if you decide to betray them later.

For even better food yields, place Magnus the Steward in whichever city has the most camps or pastures and give him the Surplus Logistics promotion. That'll add +2 food for all your trade routes to that city.

Empires of the Sea

If you're after a cultural victory, the National History Museum is a decent building to hold Great Works before you can construct more Great-Work-holding buildings in other cities. If you're after a scientific victory, the Royal Society lets you sacrifice Builders to speed up the construction of space project parts.

Dispersed empires - Civs with cities that are spread out. This is useful if you want to ensure cities have plenty of room for both districts and tile improvements. Civs with unique tile improvements generally favour a more dispersed empire in order to make use of them, as do civs focused on wonder construction.

Mekewaps initially create +1 production and +1 housing. It is the latter of the two bonuses that is more useful, as an early source of housing combined with Poundmaker's leader ability really helps your cities to grow.

Okihtcitaw rely on their mobility rather than strength. Three hits with Archers will kill them, or two hits with a Horseman or Swordsman. In fact, even regular Warriors will be fine - with the Agoge promotion, they're cheaper than Okihtcitaw are.

Royal Navy emerges stronger from initial defence review

Goddess of Festivals - Whether or not this pantheon is useful depends on the selection of luxuries on your home continent. If your selection has a lot of resources affected by this pantheon, then it's a good choice - extra food complements Mekewap housing nicely, and ensures you don't need to break up a Mekewap pattern to create farm triangles later in the game.

Collectivisation (Economic, requires Class Struggle) - Can't get allies? Don't worry, you can get incredible amounts of food with both this and Poundmaker's leader ability.

Of course, it's a different story if Okihtcitaw have the Ambush promotion. You'll want to trap the units that have it, kill them quickly and stop them pillaging farms to heal up. Promoted Archers can help to take them down until you have Swordsmen or Horsemen.

New Deal (Economic, requires Suffrage) - An excellent policy card in conjunction with the food from trade routes. Though it comes with a maintenance cost, the Cree will have more than enough gold to manage it.

You are looking for systems where there are very few hyper lane entrances. You are looking for systems where the hyper lanes are opposite each other which means ANY enemy fleet will travel over the star to get to the jump out point. May I remind you that your Bastion is orbiting THIS STAR.

GWAM - Collective name for Great Writers, Artists and Musicians. All of them can produce Great Works that offer tourism and culture, making them important to anyone seeking a cultural victory.

The link I added shows the outcome of a surrender if it does happen, and for a claims war you only get your claimed systems if the enemy surrenders, as you said. Other types of wars have different effects upon surrender. However, the only ones that list annexation (what I was describing) are total wars. So that was confusion on my part.

Kumasi (Cultural) - Can be helpful for getting the most out of city-state trade. Once you start making alliances, however, this bonus becomes a lot less useful.

Okihtcitaw are mostly effective as an exploration unit, and they arrive too early for you to really be able to do much about that. You can try investing more into exploration yourself so you can grab more ancient ruins before the Cree take them (and their experience bonus) for themselves, but you don't really need to do that if you have more important things to do early in the game.

You will gain 4 era score for training an Okihtcitaw for the first time, as well as building your first Mekewap. Together, this makes it really easy to achieve a classical-era Golden Age. Consider taking Free Inquiry or Pen, Brush and Voice for the science or culture advantages respectively, which will help you on the way to enhancing Mekewaps.

Poundmaker wants to make as many alliances as possible. He likes those who seek many allies, and dislikes those who don't.

Petra (Classical era, Mathematics technology) - Mekewaps can be constructed on desert tiles. Combine it with Petra's strong yield bonus for those tiles, and you have a very powerful city.

Terrain is rarely a problem for Mekewap placement. They can't be constructed on terrain with features like forest, rainforest, marsh or floodplains, but anything from flat snow to desert hills is fine. However, be careful where you place them. You have to place Mekewaps next to bonus or luxury resources, and you can't place them next to each other. Being unable to place them next to each other means it helps if you space your cities further apart so they can't get in the way of each other.

Instead, perhaps a better strategy is to constrain Cree expansion. The closer together Cree cities are, the fewer tiles this ability grants them (and the harder it is for them to use a lot of Mekewaps).

Economic alliances make trade routes with each other produce more gold (+6 for sender, +1 for recipient). At level 2, you'll gain influence points faster for every city-state your ally is suzerain under (encouraging you not to compete for city-states). At level 3, you can even share suzerain bonuses. This is a good choice for a civ that's further away from you.

But why antagonise the Cree when you can mutually benefit? Settling a city near a lot of camp or pasture resources will encourage the Cree to send a lot of trade routes your way, giving you gold in the process.

And finally it offers future scenarios for the evolution of empires in a Schumpeterian post-industrial world

This study focuses on Empires, from an economic historical perspective. In doing so, it relates current debates in international relations (IR) and politics to the vexed legacy of empires in the past. The book includes analyses of the comparative scholarly literature on Empire in Antiquity, and Empire in the Early Modern and Modern Ages, asking the question if the United States is an Empire, and if China an emerging Empire. It contributes to the field given its interdisciplinarity, bringing together both historical and IR insights into world systems in times past. In addition it draws out four key points of separateness between pre-modern and modern empires, and emphasizes specific economic data. Further to that, the book advances the notion of the emergence of "empires from within" in the 21st century, that is nation-states becoming more multi-ethnic while often stepping back from globalization. And finally it offers future scenarios for the evolution of empires in a Schumpeterian post-industrial world.

Market Economy (Economic, requires Capitalism) - Strengthen your international trade routes based on luxury and strategic resources in the destination city. Destination cities with furs, ivory, truffles or horses will be particularly lucrative thanks to Poundmaker's leader ability.

You'll also want as many Traders as possible, and for that you'll need a high trade route capacity. Get cities to build Commercial Hubs with Markets, or Harbours with Lighthouses. Use Builders to chop woods or rainforests to speed up the process if you have to. It's not a bad idea to deliberately settle a couple of coastal cities and build Harbours there as having two Harbours triggers the Cartography eureka. The Cartography technology makes Mekewaps offer more gold and lets you cross oceans (helping you find more potential allies).

The Civil Service civic allows you to form alliances with civs you have declared friendship with. The volume will focus on a comparative level on a specific group of states that are commonly labelled as "empires" and that we encounter through all historical periods. Although they are very successful at the very beginning, like most empires are, this success is very ephemeral and transient. The era of conquest is never followed by a period of consolidation. Collapse and/or reduction to much smaller dimension run as fast as the process of wide-ranging conquest and expansion. The volume singles out a series of such "short-term empires" and aims to provide a methodologically clearly structured as well as a uniform and consistent approach by developing a general set of questions that guarantee the possibility to compare and distinguish. This way it intends to examine not only already well established empires but also to illuminate forgotten ones.

Trade Confederation (Economic, requires Mercenaries) - Internal trade is more lucrative for the Cree than external trade at first, but eventually things like alliance bonuses will encourage sending more and more trade routes to other civs. You can build on that with this little bonus to science and culture.

If you think you can be successful with Okihctitaw warfare however, consider using the Warlord's Throne. Bonus production means while your armies are out fighting, your cities back home can develop faster, leading to an eventual nugthy empire indeed.

Antioch (Trade) - Gain extra gold from international trade. Particularly useful when sending trade routes to cities with furs, truffles or ivory.

How empires have used diversity to shape the world order for more than two millennia Empires—vast states of territories and peoples united by force and ambition—have dominated the political landscape for more than two millennia. Empires in World History departs from conventional European and nation-centered perspectives to take a remarkable look at how empires relied on diversity to shape the global order. Beginning with ancient Rome and China and continuing across Asia, Europe, the Americas, and Africa, Jane Burbank and Frederick Cooper examine empires' conquests, rivalries, and strategies of domination—with an emphasis on how empires accommodated, created, and manipulated differences among populations. Burbank and Cooper examine Rome and China from the third century BCE, empires that sustained state power for centuries. They delve into the militant monotheism of Byzantium, the Islamic Caliphates, and the short-lived Carolingians, as well as the pragmatically tolerant rule of the Mongols and Ottomans, who combined religious protection with the politics of loyalty. Burbank and Cooper discuss the influence of empire on capitalism and popular sovereignty, the limitations and instability of Europe's colonial projects, Russia's repertoire of exploitation and differentiation, as well as the "empire of liberty"—devised by American revolutionaries and later extended across a continent and beyond. With its investigation into the relationship between diversity and imperial states, Empires in World History offers a fresh approach to understanding the impact of empires on the past and present.

In singleplayer games, you can get on a civ's good side fairly easily by sending a delegation/embassy as soon as you meet them, meeting their leader's agenda or secret agenda and avoiding warmongering. Chandragupta's India is especially suitable as his agenda makes him favour distant civs, but you can usually find someone willing to make an alliance even if they're not on the map.

Terracotta Army (Classical era, Construction technology) - Have a lot of Okihctitaws? They'll now be one promotion closer to the all-important Ambush promotion. It's recommended that you train as many of the units to their second promotion as possible before you get this wonder for the maximum impact.

Finally, the Conservation civic makes Mekewaps provide +1 food per adjacent bonus resource instead of +1 for every two. This won't make Mekewaps competitive with post-Replaceable Parts farms in terms of food output, but it will allow your cities to enjoy reasonable production, food and good gold all on the same tile.

The Cree rely heavily on trade routes, but simply pillaging them might not be the best answer unless you can keep up the pressure and keep pillaging them as soon as they're established. When the Cree re-establish trade routes, they can immediately send them in a different direction and gain more new tiles out of it.

Military alliances grant +5 strength to both civs' units during defensive wars. Level 2 military alliances are normally the only type to offer shared visibility, but the Cree can use level one alliances of any type for that. Level 2 military alliances also add a +15% production bonus when building military units during wars. Level 3 alliances make all units start with a free promotion. You might want to sign this with a peaceful civ as warmongers will get a lot more out of the level 2 and 3 bonus than you will.

The Cree civ ability helps them support a more dispersed empire without having to spend a lot of gold accumulating land. Though the land-grabbing ability isn't as immediate as it is for, say, Russia, and it can't flip tiles of other civs unlike Poland's civ ability, it's great at ensuring your cities are linked up as soon as possible.

You'll want this handy tourism bonus for civs you have a trade route with. Of course, you'll want other tourism-boosting policy cards as well, but this is the one with the most explicit synergy with Cree uniques.

Goddess of the Hunt - Another food pantheon; this one offers food to all camps. This is particularly useful if you have a lot of deer.

Generally no. Under 'normal' war, when it ends you will automatically gain control of any systems you fully captured (starbase and planets) that you claimed. A War of Conquest simply reduces the Threat diplomatic penalty for seizing claims.
