The Tour de Ski included a variety of sprint and 10-kilometer races, characterized by individual surges and (literal) plummets. The event culminated with Sunday's 10K hill climb, which took racers directly up the downhill ski area on a course with an average slope angle of 12 percent and with sections reaching a gradient of 44 percent — better suited for climbing with crampons than scaling with the lightweight skinny skis used in the sport.

Hill Climb Racing 2: a testament to physics-based racing games where you do not just race – you analyze. Side-scrolling racer games have come a long way since the days of Excite Bike back in the 80s and evolved into a more digestible approach for casuals and hardcore gamers alike. Since the racing sub-genre inception in the good old flash player days, there have been numerous racers of all different types: classic head-to-head, time trials, drag and even just experimenting with the game's ragdoll physics.

But as chassis, engine and axles were clearly different, the car Davenport later reassembled has to be substantially the same vehicle. Like any special, it has matured in phases from its 1923 inception, when Davenport bought the prototype V-twin 1086cc air-cooled Vitesse engine from Archie Frazer-Nash and slotted it into a light GN cyclecar chassis, converted to centre-steering. Though looking promising in sprints and hill-climbs through 1924, Spider only took off when Davenport bought the engine from Nash's works racer 'Mowgli'. This 1500cc powerhouse boasted four-valve cylinder heads and twin-spark ignition, and throughout 1925 brought Davenport a mixture of impressive results and engine seizures. The following year saw Spider take its first major scalp — a 48/8sec record up Shelsley Walsh, the first-ever to crack 50sec, beating Raymond Mays' TT Vauxhall. Suddenly, this gawky interloper was a major player. In 1927, after redesigning the crankcase with staggered barrels, to allow straight conrods, and switching to alcohol fuel, Davenport intensified his duel with Mays, that lover of all things refined — which did not include a plebeian hill-climb special. First, his supercharged 2-litre Mercedes-Benz, and then his very powerful Vauxhall-Villiers found Spider heading them; and when the German aces came to Shelsley Walsh in 1930, Spider scaled the hill in 44/6, almost 2sec quicker than Rudi Caracciola's SSK Mercedes, and again taking the record from Mays. Frustratingly, Hans Stuck's Austro-Daimler then put up a record-shattering 42/8. But the point was clear: you didn't need factory expertise to run at the top.

Before being turned into a specialized hill climb monster, the RMR time attack racer began life as a regular-production, street-going Genesis Coupe with a 3/8L V6 engine. To prepare it for the rigors of Pikes Peak, all unnecessary interior and exterior components were removed before installing a roll cage and other critical safety equipment. An aerodynamic package complete with front splitter, a wide body, and an enormous rear wing creates the downforce required to maintain traction at high speed. Mechanical grip is provided by ultra-wide Hankook Ventus F200 racing slicks mounted on custom HRE lightweight wheels. In Pikes Peak trim, the Hyundai V6 engine yields an incredible 700 horsepower and 710 lb-ft of torque thanks to a Brian Crower 4/1L stroker kit and a Garrett GTX35R turbocharger. All elements of the car, from the engine to the brakes, are optimized to perform while racing at the extremely high altitudes of Pikes Peak.

The mechanics at Defekt aren't skilled or careful enough for this bike, you think, so you drop it, upon your bachelor bike-nut neighbor's advice, at BikePont. The mechanic is friendly in his shoe-sized shop, was a racer he says, and that kind of matters as an indicator of reliability and precision and what you expect. It's not expensive in the end and you pick up the blue bike with white highlights on a Saturday market morning. You park it in your studio and just stare at it in wonder. But you're at pains not to climb on. Once you're aboard and riding a city loop that afternoon, it's like traveling in pre-carbon, pre-titanium time, the low swooping geometry up front and the wheel's right under your ass. You kick south and then come at Gellért Hill from behind, breaking in this dirt rocket that climbs like a goat and drops like an eagle. The next day you make the traditional loop to the Sacred Spot. And a week later you're finally kicking on the fire roads of the Buda hills, realizing what a bitch is mountain biking.

RC2 is a superb rally title with great car handling, responsive controls and still keeps the realism given the nature of the surface being driven on. Three different rally styles are available in the game with a view to knowing where you're heading. Head-to-head races show the entire course as mini-map on screen much the same way as many course-based racers. The hill climbing courses give you a similar idea of what is ahead via a map but in this case only the next half-mile or so can be viewed, with the map moving along with your progress. The final method is via co-driver and it is definitely worthwhile decreasing the music volume and turning up the co-driver. Unless you're an avid rally fan, there's some subtleties in the co-driver instructions you can easily miss like "easy left tightens" could lull you into a false sense of ease for the corner ahead. The co-driver doesn't give you direction either - "left" and "right" are not mentioned but instead shown via arrows on screen and the colour of the arrow gives you the immediate severity of the corner. Combining both the co-driver's instructions and on-screen visuals is key to staying on course (until, of course, you've memorised the track). I've not completely uploaded all the variations of the footage recorded, but everything "missing" is in the career footage already there.

You can choose from classic cars to the most modern racing cars with amazing physics engine that can deliver the most realistic racing fun possible. Complete tons of unique missions to become a professional driver and to become rich! Be a furious racer and burn the asphalt of this open world city with new City Car Driving experience for all the simulation fans! The road system are also very dense, from highways and 2x2 lanes, to very small road of montains, with hill climb.
