A relatively modest 99-vulnerability February Patch Tuesday has arrived with a fix for the Internet Explorer 0-day CVE-2021-0674 (originally ADV200001) announced back on January 17. Fortunately, that is the only vulnerability reported this month that has been seen actively exploited in the wild. Our usual set of suspected software takes center stage today (operating systems, Internet Explorer, and Office-related software), but with some supporting cast-members in Exchange Server, and SQL Server. When it comes to animation programs, there's a lot you can choose from, but there are key factors in deciding what to get. One is finding a program that can do exactly what you're looking for, while you may also want one that is capable of much more. The other main factor is finding something you can afford. For me, I desire a program that can handle frame by frame animation and digital puppet animation, colloquially dubbed "tweened animation". The most notable of programs that can do both are Adobe Flash (now known as Adobe Animate), Toon Boom Harmony, and Smith Micro's Anime Studio, now known as Moho. I always felt it was best to use the animation software that's used most often in the industry. For years I animated with Adobe Flash CS3, and although I can still make cartoons with it, later versions have many improved features. What has kept me from upgrading was Adobe's switch to a subscription model for their software where you'll pay $20 for one program a month or $50 for the entire Creative Cloud, which I would need since I also use Adobe After Effects and Photoshop. Toon Boom's Harmony program is another industry standard, being specifically designed for animation production.

They also require employees to remember initiating or accepting update prompts. Updates are critical because they improve performance and implement patches that mend software vulnerabilities. If left unpatched, these vulnerabilities expose servers to attackers ready to strike. Implement a software deployment tool that automates system updates, scans for vulnerabilities, and practices regular patch management across applications.

Scammers use this deceptive website to trick people into installing the latest Flash Player (supposedly, Adobe Flash Player). They attempt to make visitors believe that they do not have the latest version installed - having it installed will supposedly improve browsing performance. In fact, this site has nothing do to with the official Flash Player and will not update the current installed version. Generally, websites of this type trick people into downloading and installing unwanted applications (adware and so on). Therefore, unofficial websites should not be used to update or download software. People often arrive at these websites due to installed adware-type PUAs, which deliver advertisements that conceal underlying content of any visited website. They feed users with coupons, banners, surveys, pop-ups, and so on. If clicked, these ads open dubious, potentially malicious websites, or run scripts designed to cause other unwanted downloads/installations. Another downside of these PUAs is that they continually collect browsing-related, and other, data. They gather entered search queries, geo-locations, URLs of visited websites, IP addresses, and so on. They often target personal, sensitive data. Developers share recorded information with third parties (potentially, cyber criminals) who misuse private data to generate revenue.

While these suggestions may be an acceptable interim strategy, I believe this conflict of interests is the beginning of a changing of the guard on the Internet as I notice that more and more websites are eliminating Flash from their files and are converting to use of html5 or javascript instead. By the same token, RedmondPie.com reports that a new entrepreneurial company is seizing this situation as a business opportunity with the release of a new product to receive Flash on iPhone: ". you can now get a very alpha version of Flash (aka Frash) to run right on your iPhone 4. " How many more innovators will soon follow this trend? I have already seen that the mobile phone market has been quick to jump into the fray with blatant marketing messages about their products' warmhearted reception of Flash! Apple in the meantime has clarified its "hostile" status by saying that its decision to restrict inclusion of the Adobe Flash Readers that still can receive Flash was made with concern that users receive the latest version of that software which they can get for free directly from Adobe.

If you've seen the eye-popping animated blockbusters lately, including WALL•E and Kung Fu Panda, you'll know that CG animation now rules the roost. In fact, ever since Pixar wowed us with environments and characters that looked like they could leap off the screen, 2D animation has taken a bit of a back seat to this newcomer. But a new wave of digital tools, starting back in the early 1990s with TVPaint and other software, allows 2D artists to take unique advantage of computer horsepower. Around the turn of the century, Adobe Flash emerged as the breakout player in this segment, of course, even though it was never truly intended for TV or feature film production. But Flash surely isn't the only game in town.

As organizations continue to improve their ability to programmatically upgrade and patch software, attackers are in turn getting stealthier. In organizations where end users and IT teams typically opt to update and patch software promptly, attackers have predictably adapted their strategies to counter this move. Often, they will target software updates with an effort to get in and create backdoor access, spread malware and/or just generally wreak havoc. In short, attackers refined the ways they can install malware or inject malicious software into endpoints during updates and patches. A potential path could involve sending a phishing mail that prompts an unsuspecting user to install a fake update and install malware on their system. For example, a 2021 campaign dubbed "Fake Updates" spread bogus patches for software such as Google Chrome, Mozilla Firefox, Internet Explorer and Adobe Flash Player.

We have 3rd party software (Shavlik) installed to manage software updates, but I noticed that it is not always perfect for situations where multiple major versions of the software are installed. During my testing, I tried to deploy Adobe Acrobat Reader DC to replace Reader 11 and Adobe Flash Player 27/0.0/130 replace older versions of Flash (we had some old ones like 13, 15, 18, 21, 22). After the patches deployment, I noticed that it will bring up the patch level to the current one, given it's been approved and downloaded in Shavlik. In other words, it will not upgrade the major version of the product (from Adobe Reader 11 to DC, or from Flash 18 to 27).

Of course, there's the ubiquitous Adobe Flash which is still the most widely used 2D animation tool, though its influence has been waning in recent years.

This rerouting problem has nothing to do with an informed decision on the victim's end. The malicious app usually slithers into a Mac alongside ostensibly legit software. This is what's called bundling, a method that results in installing several programs under the guise of one. Some users have reported the Bing redirect virus starting to cause problems after they installed and activated the Microsoft Office suite. Some start encountering these issues after falling victim to the fake Adobe Flash Player update hoax. In the latter case, a rogue "Your Flash Player is out of date" popup appears on a malicious website or one compromised by malefactors. By applying the malware-riddled update, the user unwittingly opts for Bing as their default search provider. Additionally, there has been some feedback about the redirect culprit infiltrating Macs alongside a fake system optimizer like Mac Cleanup Pro or another one from the same lineage.

Flash, a popular authoring software developed by Macromedia (purchased by Adobe in 2005), is used to create vector graphics-based animation programs with full-screen navigation interfaces, graphic illustrations, and simple interactivity in an antialiased, resizable file format that is small enough to stream across a normal modem connection. The software is ubiquitous on the Web, both because of its speed (vector-based animations, which can adapt to different display sizes and resolutions, play as they download) and for the smooth way it renders graphics. Flash files, unlike animated but rasterized GIF and JPEG, are compact, efficient, and designed for optimized delivery.

Rather than trick users into installing what appeared to be an update to the Adobe Flash program—as previous Flashback versions did—this new release exploited a security bug in Apple's version of the Java software framework. Users who had it installed and visited booby-trapped websites were infected with no warning. Even after Apple released software to remove Flashback, the malware was still able to thrive in the following weeks, expanding its infection base to 650,000 machines. Over the past two or three months, more than 38,000 machines remained infected, according to a researcher at antivirus provider Kaspersky Lab.

Photoshop Mobile gives you access to your online albums and the ability to upload photos to your Photoshop.com account from your Windows Mobile device. It's more of an organizer with the ability to create/manage albums as well as being a viewer. It's still a Beta application and is somewhat limited in the number of compatible devices. I was able to use the application on my AT&T Fuze by telling the software it was the AT&T Tilt. Obviously the application will need a data connection but will also require Adobe Flash to run. Photoshop.com Mobile is an interesting application, well worth a look at if you want online and mobile access to photos.

Quick Mac Fixer malware is nothing out of the ordinary in terms of the distribution vectors it follows. The stronghold of its propagation is unethical bundling, a long-standing controversial technique that combines benign applications with harmful ones within the same wrapping. In this case, the user may firmly believe they are about to install some program with awesome bells and whistles built in. Meanwhile, a dangerous payload will sneak inside the Mac along the way and start doing its abominable thing without asking for permission. This social engineering trick often involves fake Adobe Flash Player updates and cracked versions of popular software distributed via torrent resources. One way or another, the contamination is cloaked underneath an ostensibly normal installer.

With my possession of a laptop, I learned how to use Microsoft Office packages such as Excel, Powerpoint, and Word. The advent of every new day saw me learn new things I had no idea about. As time progressed, I became exposed to different operating systems besides the windows OS. At a time, I dual booted an Ubuntu OS with my primary OS — Windows 8/1, for experimentation purposes. I was, however, no expert on handling such Operating Systems. I would play with quite a few other Application Softwares like Typing Master, Encarta, Mavis Beacon, Skype, etc. I had a laptop but my usage was streamlined to entertainment (Pro Evolution Soccer), study (Nitro PDF and Adobe Acrobat), and surfing the net (mostly with Chrome Browser). I could flash lives out of phones and root mobile devices as fast as the snap of my fingers. I knew there was a lot more than that but I wasn't yet ready to advance.

Soundbooth CS3 replaces Audition entirely, and the Encore disc authoring app is included, as with

First created in 1996, Adobe Flash Player allows your browser to run a variety of media online from video and audio to games and web apps. However, while Flash made it easy to browse media-rich websites without needing heavy software or complex programming languages, it has always presented some security risks. As early as 2021, Steve Jobs, the late founder of Apple, published a letter criticizing Flash for being unreliable, power-intensive, and littered with security drawbacks.

The graphics are more sophisticated than past Facebook games, but they are built with Adobe's Flash software. That means there are limitations, as the game can't take advantage of 3D graphics hardware. The units look pretty, but they are pretty small on the battlefield. The Flash preservation project Flashpoint allows players to play thousands of Flash games offline by emulating both the game and a local server to mimic the original site. This allows Flashpoint to bypass the site locks and online features without hacking the game. You can select from two versions of Flashpoint for general use, Flashpoint Ultimate and Flashpoint Infinity. Flashpoint Ultimate is the full offline package, containing every game and requiring 530GB of storage. It also requires additional software to download and extract. Flashpoint Infinity only downloads the Launcher, with each game being downloaded when you choose to play it. Additionally, Flashpoint Infinity initially only supports Adobe Flash and HTML5 games, but can download other software through its Launcher. For both versions, you may need to make changes to your antivirus settings to get them to run properly. Avast and AVG antivirus in particular are known to mistake Flashpoint as a threat.

An anonymous reader quotes a report from Motherboard: Motherboard has obtained a never-before-seen 10-minute video showing a live demo for a spyware solution made by a little known Italian surveillance contractor called RCS Lab. Unlike Hacking Team, RCS Lab has been able to fly under the radar for years, and very little is known about its products, or its customers. The video shows an RCS Lab employee performing a live demo of the company's spyware to an unidentified man, including a tutorial on how to use the spyware's control software to perform a man-in-the-middle attack and infect a target computer who wanted to visit a specific website. RCS Lab's spyware, called Mito3, allows agents to easily set up these kind of attacks just by applying a rule in the software settings. An agent can choose whatever site he or she wants to use as a vector, click on a dropdown menu and select "inject HTML" to force the malicious popup to appear, according to the video. Mito3 allows customers to listen in on the target, intercept voice calls, text messages, video calls, social media activities, and chats, apparently both on computer and mobile platforms. It also allows police to track the target and geo-locate it thanks to the GPS. It even offers automatic transcription of the recordings, according to a confidential brochure obtained by Motherboard. The company's employee shows how such an attack would work, setting mirc.com (the site of a popular IRC chat client) to be injected with malware (this is shown around 4:45 minutes in). Once the fictitious target navigates to the page, a fake Adobe Flash update installer pops up, prompting the user to click install.

Taken together, the videos we created made use of almost every single feature and function in Adobe Premiere Elements 3. Some of the testers captured video directly from several different DV cameras (Canon, Sony and Panasonic models); some loaded MPEG-2 or AVI files directly from portable hard drives, USB flash drives or DVD. Everybody made use of individual or combined audio elements including background music tracks, narration, sound effects and of course recorded audio. Two of the testers used HDV capture from Sony HD cameras. Some of the productions were overloaded with needlessly confusing transition effects; some used only straight cuts from scene to scene. Some used elaborate titles and excessive onscreen text; some used lead and closing titles only. One production was a dramatic and quite beautiful time lapse of snow melting on the banks of a slowly thawing stream, the water moving faster and faster throughout the video, all of which was accompanied by the last three minutes of the William Tell Overture. My other favorite was a jumpy, jerky video montage of a child's birthday party containing everything from a couple of slightly out-of-focus moments to a curious little doofus with absolutely huge brown eyes who managed to poke the lens with a cake-covered finger as he peered directly into the camera. People are really creative and I've got to say that having the opportunity to view each production at the end of the review period was worth the effort a dozen times over. I think that if we don't preserve these views of life and the world around us by spending a little time with some good software, life in general might be a little less entertaining.
