During the review process, the full version of Sapphire 7 ran without any hiccups inside Adobe After Effects CS4, on a Windows 7 laptop with an Intel Core i7-2820QM 2/3GHz CPU, 8GB of RAM and an NVIDIA GeForce GTX 560M video card. Results tend to vary by system so it's a good idea for prospective buyers to check the GenArts website and make sure their system meets the requirements. Sapphire is compatible with a number of host platforms such as Adobe After Effects, Apple Final Cut Pro, Autodesk Smoke, Avid Media Composer, The Foundry Nuke, Sony Vegas Pro and open source platforms. It's also capable of running on Linux, Mac and Windows, operating systems. Again, check the compatibility notes on the website for more detail.

I would also like to see Edge come to both Avid Media Composer and Adobe Premiere Pro. According to GenArts, there's a current technical limitation in Premiere that might keep Edge away. GenArts is evaluating Media Composer support but I wouldn't hold my breath for that one either. The full Sapphire effects package has been on Media Composer for a long time and is the go-to tool for many Avid editors. Do they, like the broader Final Cut and Sony Vegas market, have a need for this lighter version of Sapphire?
